Love and gifts of Orchids, Flowers and Wellness Products

We have collected orchids from Whole Foods Markets and flower bouquets from Florists and Event Designers. When a flower of an orchid plant dies or breaks, the plant is no longer marketable to retail consumers and, unfortunately, goes into the waste heap. What's impressive is that this Orchid is usually a perfectly healthy plant, ready to grow a set of new flowers. Thankfully, we have successfully adopted these plants to be revitalized in a greenhouse-like setting. We are honored and inspired to see our orchid gifting (that started during the Covid Pandemic at different hospitals) continue now at Atlanta's hospices. We hope to bring light and love to the many surrounded by the darkness and pain of losing a loved one. May this gift of love shine, even for just a moment, and illuminate the darkness of despair.

For our dedicated healthcare workers, may those gifts be uplifting, inspiring, and empowering to serve the patients with utmost compassion and love.

We thank Atlanta's Wholefoods Markets and Atlanta's Floral Event Planers for participating and assisting us in making this gifting possible. We are happy to say that the orchid gifting of our healthcare workers did not end with the Covid Pandemic; it continues strongly now at the hospices in Atlanta.

We plan to collaborate with prisons and veterans to continue our orchid rescue greenhouse project as a means of rehabilitation, therapy, employment, and community outreach that is very much aligned with our mission
